...when life is never certain...

The sound of a solitary howl breaking out over a quiet forest can be one of the most tranquil and calming sounds heard. The unmistakable sound calls forth visions of the majestic animal that once roamed most of the world. Folklore, myth and superstition, however, have made wolves the villain, both in fiction and in real life. Armed with this misinformation humanity has pushed them to the brink of extinction, where they struggle to survive in already harsh conditions.

Full Moon's Circle casts wolves in a positive role, taking a look at these struggles and following the lives of several families of wolves. Strong Alpha leaders guide their packs as they encounter external forces that threaten their territories, including challenges from other packs, invading predators and human hunters. Each of the short stories included in Full Moon's Circle focuses on a specific event, including a hungry mountain lion, insolent youths, and a raging forest fire.

Diedrich Buck has always had an affinity for wolves, and has used his love for the creatures as a basis for many works of fiction. This is his first published collection of short stories.
